Dear Legal Eagle,

Summer is my favorite time of year! I love the hot weather outside, but I like my house to be nice and cool to escape the heat. Unfortunately, the air conditioner in my apartment stopped working last week. Can I make my landlord pay for the repairs, or do I have to pay for the repairs myself?

Pennsylvania landlords must abide by a doctrine known as the Implied Warranty of Habitability. This means that every landlord has a responsibility to keep the residence they are renting out habitable for their tenants. For example, a residence without water would be considered uninhabitable, so your landlord is required to provide it for you. Keeping residences heated is also a responsibility of the landlord. However, there is a gray area when it comes to air conditioners. Unfortunately, most landlords are not required to provide air conditioning for their tenants. This means that your landlord probably isn’t required by law to fix the air conditioner.

But don’t lose hope just yet. Take a look at your lease. If your lease says anything that implies air conditioning was part of the deal when you signed, then your landlord may have a contractual duty to maintain the air conditioner. It may say something like “2 bedroom, air conditioned apartment,” or something similar. This shows that air conditioning was one of the terms you agreed to when you signed the lease, making your landlord required by contract, but not necessarily by law, to maintain it.

Of course, the answer really depends on your situation. For example, the answer may change if the damage was something you caused rather than something caused by normal wear and tear. No matter what, make sure to communicate any issues to your landlord to hopefully resolve things quickly and peacefully.

Stay cool!

Legal Eagle is brought to you this month by the Carlisle Barracks Legal Assistance Office (717) 245-4940; Cassidy Rivera, Dickinson Law Student, and CPT Katie Dang, Judge Advocate.
